Video: Making Math Interactive

Have you been struggling with getting your students to have more number sense?

SREB Coach Debbie Robertson recorded a PLC session where she showed the teachers at one of her schools how to create a human number line to help make numbers more visual (and fun).

Try this in your classroom if you really want to bring the concept to life!

SREB Coach Christi Edwards coordinated the recording of this interactive math session.

Put It in Practice: Using Scorecards

When you have a classroom goal, making it visual can help students get involved in the tracking process. A classroom scorecard helps students see the purpose of what they are doing in class and lets them take ownership of their learning. Plus, being able to track their success makes them more engaged in the material!

SREB Coach Daniel Rock created a handout you can use to add scoreboards to your classroom. Download it here to see how it's done.
